The CLARION local case competition is a nationally recognized competition held every spring at the University of Minnesota. Interdisciplinary teams of healthcare students work together to create and present solutions to real world health care issues. This year’s case highlights the growing opioid crisis and the challenges that communities have accessing care. This team will represent the U of M at the national competition on April 14th!

A special thank you to all the participants, judges, case writers, CHIP staff, board members, and sponsors that contributed time and effort to the local case competition.
